Synopsis

Owen Sanders has found the perfect job. One that is high-paying, close to home and more importantly, a position that allows him to date his former boss's daughter. Soon afterwards, he discovers that his new job in Web design isn't that perfect. Owen begins to suspect that his new employer is selling more than just pictures over the Internet. Using his computer skills, he uncovers the secret embedded within the pixels and tries to stop his company's online auction from its damaging consequences.

Director's Biography

Mark Kochanowicz received his B.A. degree from the Pennsylvania State University. After graduation he began training as an actor with several well-respected teachers and during this time, Mark's gained industry experience working as a stand-in on several television series. Less than a year afterwards, he landed principal roles on television and in independent films. Wanting to utilize this firsthand training, Mark Kochanowicz wrote, directed and starred in his first short film, Pixel Perfect, which earned him a "Filmmaker to Watch 2004" award from the Philly Underground Music & Philm Festival.
